I want to change the format of the date. Now it's (dd.mm.yyyy), I want to change it to (dd-mm-yyyy). I tried: $('datepicker').datepicker({ format: 'dd-mm-yyyy' }); It did not work. :(A: You can use add/remove methods for that. $('datepicker').datepicker({ format: "dd-mm-yyyy" }).datepicker('remove', 'format'); //remove the format $('datepicker').datepicker({ format: "dd-mm-yyyy" }); Justine, That's a lot of work - I say don't bother with the frame. You can put the wood in an outdoor dust-free place for about 12 months. That's about how long'real' varnish takes to dry out, and its hard to say if you can even use it back in your room. I think leaving the painted porch would be wiser. I once watched my mother buy a dollar table top that looked halfway decent but was obviously stained badly and would take a TON of elbow grease to make nice. She just ignored the markings and called it antique. However, those marks are an invitation to the vandals! Some random suggestions:-The wood is very thick (i.e. it looks thicker than it actually is) and is already weatherproof. So you could just seal it with a coat of semi-gloss paint and be done-An all white frame wouldnt look good-A black frame might-Actually, a black frame would be nice-You could also try to find a different wood and give it to someone to do the refinishing for you, since it already needs it I would go ahead with refinishing if you want it to have a classic, yet elegant vibe to it. The black frame will match most other surfaces.
